By Appointment.

Ben Nevis from Banavie. The highest mountain in Scotland, 4,406 feet, is situated amidst picturesque scenery with Fort William at its base. On the opposite side is Banavie, on the shores of Loch Eil, close to which is the Caledonian Canal. The ascent of Ben Nevis is made by a great number of tourists during the season, which is well repaid by the magnificent views of the surrounding country to be had from the top. An Observatory was erected in 1883 on the summit, where observations are being constantly taken.
